INTRODUCTION.

This volume, the primary object of which is to facilitate reference to the statistics published in the 1926 Census County Volumes, contains indexes to the following territorial divisions of Northern Ireland as they existed at the Census date.

1. Parliamentary Constituencies.
2. Poor Law Unions (or Superintendent Registrars' Districts).
3. County (i.e., Urban and Rural) Districts.
4. County Boroughs.
5. County Electoral Divisions.
6. Dispensary (or Registrars') Districts.
7. District Electoral Divisions (including Wards).
8. Towns.
9. Townlands.

Complete topographical particulars, with Ordnance Survey and Census County Volume references, are given for each item in Indexes 2-9. In addition, Indexes 8-9 contain references to the obsolete territorial units of barony and parish (see below), and Index 9 shows the area of each townland.

Counties.—Of the six counties in Northern Ireland all but Antrim and Down (the origin of which is uncertain) were formed in or about the year 1584. The largest county is Tyrone, with 779,563 acres; the smallest, Armagh, with 312,767 acres. (These acreages exclude land under the larger rivers, lakes and tideways).

Parliamentary Constituencies.—The constituencies shown were, at the date of the Census, used for the purposes of elections both to the Imperial Parliament and the Parliament of Northern Ireland. For the latter purpose they have since been replaced by single-member constituencies formed pursuant to the House of Commons (Method of Voting and Redistribution of Seats) Act (N.I.), 1929.

Poor Law Unions (or Superintendent Registrars' Districts).—Poor Law Unions are multiples of townlands, district electoral divisions, and dispensary districts; and usually comprise a rural district with the one or more urban districts situate therein. They were established as the area of administration for poor relief by the Poor Relief (I) Act, 1838, and were originally constituted by taking a large market town as a centre and attaching to it the adjoining rural district within a radius of about ten miles. Until the passing of the Local Government (I) Act of 1898 poor law guardians levied their own rates and it was therefore unnecessary, when unions were being delimited, to pay any regard to county boundaries. There are twenty-seven poor law unions in Northern Ireland, of which twenty are situated wholly in one county, four extend into two counties, and one into three counties. Of the remaining two one lies partly in a county and partly in a county borough, the other partly in two counties and partly in a county borough.

The Superintendent Registrars' Districts formed under the Act 26 Vic., cap. 11, by which a general registration of births and deaths was established in Ireland, are in all cases identical with the poor law unions, the clerks of the unions being ex-officio Superintendent Registrars. The districts of the Registrars of Marriages under the Act 7 and 8 Vic., cap. 81 are also co-extensive with these districts and the poor law unions.

County Districts.—These were formed pursuant to the Local Government (I) Act, 1898, from the sanitary districts established by the Public Health (I) Act, 1878. They consist for the most part of groups of district electoral divisions,* and are of two classes, urban and rural, each district having a separate council.

Urban district councils are the sole rating authorities within their respective jurisdictions, and have full administrative powers in matters pertaining to public health. They are also responsible for the maintenance and repair of public roads within their areas; they may formulate and execute schemes for the housing of the working-classes; and they are authorised to provide water, gas and electricity supplies.

Rural district councils have themselves no fiscal powers, though the areas which they control form the units of taxation for county purposes. They are primarily public health authorities, their obligatory and permissive functions in this respect being virtually as great as those of urban district councils. They have also extensive powers in connection with the erection and supervision of houses for agricultural labourers.

There were in 1926 thirty-one urban districts and thirty-two rural districts in Northern Ireland. Since that time two urban districts (Bangor and Coleraine) have become boroughs, and one town under the Towns Improvement Act of 1854 (Whitehead) has become an urban district.

County Boroughs.—County boroughs were established by the Local Government (I) Act, 1898. These areas are both administrative counties and urban districts, and the councils of the two county boroughs in Northern Ireland therefore exercise the same powers and perform the same duties as county councils on the one hand, and urban district councils on the other.

County Electoral Divisions.—These are areas into which each county is divided for the purpose of election of members of the county council under the Local Government (I) Act, 1898. They are multiples of district electoral divisions and are arranged with a view to the population of each division being as nearly as possible equal. The county electoral divisions in Northern Ireland were reconstituted in 1923 and now number 129.

Dispensary (or Registrars') Districts.—Dispensary districts were created under the provisions of the Medical Charities Act, 1851. They are sub-divisions of poor law unions, formed with regard to extent and population.

Under the Registration Act of 1863 dispensary districts were adopted as registrars' districts, subject to such alterations as might be deemed expedient. Thus there were in Northern Ireland at the date of the Census 177 dispensary districts and 178 registrars' districts, the dispensary district in one case forming two registration districts. The present numbers are 178 and 179 respectively.

District Electoral Divisions.—These were originally established under the Poor Relief (I) Act, 1838 as poor law electoral divisions, their present name being fixed by the Local Government (I) Act, 1898. The district electoral divisions in Northern Ireland were reconstituted in 1923 and now number 701. Each rural district electoral division consists of a group of townlands. These areas are used for the purposes of local government and poor law elections.

Wards are sub-divisions of county boroughs, boroughs and urban districts. At the date of the Census they existed in 18 of the 33 urban areas, being in all but one case co-terminous with the urban district electoral divisions. In the exception referred to, the urban district, which consists of a single district electoral division, is divided into two wards.

Towns.—The towns shown comprise those created under the Towns Improvement (I) Act, 1854—four in number—together with 140 towns of fifty or more houses having no legally defined boundary. One of the former class (Whitehead) has since been constituted an urban district.

Townlands.—Townlands are the units from which all the other territorial divisions, except those in urban areas, are made up. They are the smallest recognised divisions in the Census publications and on the Ordnance Survey maps, and at the date of the Census numbered 9,521. In size they vary considerably, but on an average they contain about 350 acres each.

Boundary Alterations.—The Ministry of Home Affairs has statutory power to alter, by sealed order, the boundaries of the various local government areas referred to above, subject to the provisos that

- (a) Any alteration of a county or borough boundary shall be confirmed by Parliament.
- (b) A union shall not, if it is conveniently possible to avoid it, be divided between more than two counties, and shall not in any case be divided between more than three counties.
- (c) A county district shall be situate wholly in one county
- (d) A district electoral division shall be situate wholly in one county district.
- (e) So far as practicable, the boundaries of an area of local government shall not intersect the boundaries of any other area of local government.

Changes in townland boundaries rendered necessary by the straightening of river courses, reclamation from the sea, or other circumstance, are made on the Ordnance Survey maps after approval by the Chief Boundary Surveyor.

Details of all boundary changes in administrative areas between 1911 and 1926 (apart from those occasioned by the reconstitution of county and district electoral divisions in 1923) will be found in the Census County Volumes.

LISTS OF BARONIES AND PARISHES.

In order to meet the needs of persons who may wish to ascertain the barony and civil parish in which any given townland is situate, lists of these now obsolete territorial divisions, with numerical references corresponding to those given in the last two columns of the Townland Index, are appended.

The barony was originally a feudal and military jurisdiction, but came in course of time to be used for fiscal and administrative purposes only. The parish, at first a purely ecclesiastical division, was adopted at an early date as an area for civil purposes also; but even before the passing of the Irish Church Act of 1869 the boundaries of the civil and ecclesiastical parishes were not in all cases identical.
