REGISTRAR GENERAL'S FOREWORD

INTRODUCTION

This is the preliminary report on the Census of Population which was held in Northern Ireland on 21 April 1991. Censuses were also taken on the same date in other parts of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. The preliminary count represents the population recorded as present in Northern Ireland on Census night in private households, communal establishments, ships and other places. The count also shows the number of private households for each local government district. The figures in the report are provisional and have been obtained from the records prepared by the field staff and from the completed census forms and are subject to revision when the returns are examined further for the later and more detailed census reports.

ORGANISATION

The 1991 Census was organised on broadly similar lines to the 1981 Census. The country was again divided into small areas (enumeration districts), in each of which an enumerator was responsible for enumerating all persons present or resident within the district on census night. This involved the delivery and collection of forms in these districts. There were around 3,700 districts compared with 3,000 in 1981 and each contained on average 155 households.

The enumeration districts were grouped into census districts, each containing on average 24 enumeration districts. A census officer was appointed to each census district to assist in the recruitment and training of enumerators and to oversee their work. In all 158 census officers were appointed.

Census Area Managers formed the top tier of the field organisation. Each was responsible for recruiting, training and overseeing the work of the census officers.

In total therefore, up to 4,000 field staff were recruited by Census Office through the Training and Employment Agency of the Department of Economic Development, advertising in the local press and by the display of posters in public places.

TAKING THE CENSUS

The success of a population census depends greatly on the attitude of the public and their co-operation in completing census returns. I wish to thank householders and all others responsible for the completion of forms for their willingness and understanding. Thanks are also due to the BBC, ITV, local radio stations and the Press for their invaluable assistance in publicising and generating interest in the Census and to Post Offices, local authorities, public services and others who helped in various ways to get the Census message across. The part played by staff in the field and at headquarters was of course vital and I am grateful for their dedication and enthusiasm.

Overall, I am pleased to record a very good response to the Census. The total population enumerated as present in Northern Ireland on Census night was 1,569,971. The number of households enumerated was 524,638 which represents 98.2% of the estimated total number of households.

A number of households could not be contacted during the Census. These households were subsequently contacted by a letter requesting them to complete and return a Census form and explaining why it was in their interest to do so. Returns from this follow-up exercise will be reflected in the later and more detailed topic reports.

THE FUTURE PROGRAMME

As indicated, the figures in this report are provisional and are based on the population present on Census night. The main Census Reports will be based on a computer analysis of the data obtained from Census forms and will reflect the population resident in each district council area. The task of processing the results is under way and it is planned to publish the Summary Report, which is the first of the detailed reports, in the Autumn of 1992. It will contain figures on area, population, age, marital status, religion, economic activity and housing for each Northern Ireland local government district. This will be followed by a Belfast Urban Area Report towards the end of 1992. The remaining detailed Reports on the particular topics of economic activity, workplace, housing, migration, education, religion and Irish language will be published as soon as possible thereafter.

1991 CENSUS PRELIMINARY RESULTS

The figures, which are provisional, are based on the actual population present and enumerated in Northern Ireland on Census night including civilians and Service personnel. There were minor changes regarding the enumeration of shipping since the 1981 Census. The enumeration of naval ships was handled by the Ministry of Defence; and British registered commercial vessels were enumerated at larger ports by customs officers and at smaller ports and marinas by enumerators. Enumerators were responsible for enumerating small boats and houseboats on inland waterways and in port areas. Foreign registered vessels in ports, excluded in 1981, were included in 1991.

The figures show that the population of Northern Ireland as enumerated at midnight on 21 April 1991 totalled 1,569,971 comprising 764,818 males and 805,153 females. As indicated under the COVERAGE heading below, the figures represent 98.2% of the estimated total number of households. In the 1981 Census the total enumerated population was 1,490,228. However, the 1981 Census suffered the effect of non-response in some areas, and the overall population, including non-enumerated, was subsequently estimated at 1,532,196.

COVERAGE

Results from any population census will inevitably contain some inaccuracies arising from:

- a. Failure to identify all the living accommodation in an enumeration district.
- b. Incorrect classification of accommodation as vacant or occupants absent.
- c. Failure to identify all the households in a building.
- d. Failure to make contact with some households.
- e. Misunderstanding of the form by the form-filler.

A Census validation survey will attempt to quantify these inaccuracies. This is a voluntary survey covering a sample of 2,000 addresses and will provide useful information on both the quality and coverage of the Census.

The number of households enumerated was 524,638 which represents 98.2% of the estimated total number of households. Around 10,000 households, following several calls by enumerators, could not be contacted. Letters have been sent to these explaining the importance of making a census return, and stressing that it is in their interest to do so.

NATURAL INCREASE AND INTERCENSAL MOVEMENT

The figures for natural increase, ie excess of births over deaths, are obtained from the annual statistics of births and deaths published in the Registrar General's Annual Reports. The natural increase of the population for each intercensal period since birth and death registration commenced in 1864 is shown in Table 'A' together with the actual variations in population for each period and the net loss by migration for 1871-1991.

There have been no significant changes in the population in the intercensal period between 1981 and 1991. The number of births registered (274,834) during the period shows an increase of 48 compared with the number of births registered in the 10 year intercensal period between 1971 and 1981 while the number of deaths registered (159,025) in the same comparative periods shows a decrease of 8,207. The excess of births over deaths (115,809) in the intercensal period 1981 to 1991 when placed against the total estimated population for 1981 suggests a net outward migration of around 78,000 or an average of 7,800 persons per year over the period. These figures are subject to downward adjustment as forms currently outstanding are received. They compare with about 150,000 or 15,000 persons per year between 1971 and 1981 and about 60,000 or 6,000 persons per year between 1961 and 1971.

However, within the total population figures there is considerable variation at District Council level between the enumerated population and the 1990 mid-year estimates. These variations reflect the great difficulty, common to other countries, of obtaining reliable information about migration. They also reflect the difficulty in attributing the effects of non-enumeration at the 1981 Census accurately to individual District Councils. It is therefore inevitable that in estimating population, differences of the above nature occur.

Table 'B' below shows the natural increase, ie excess of births over deaths for each local government district in Northern Ireland between 1981 and 1991, as well as the total population at the end of the period. It reveals that the population of the Belfast local government district declined from 314,270 to 280,972 (10.6% decrease). None of the other 3 districts showing a decline - Antrim (1.7%), Castlereagh (0.1%) and Strabane (1.6%) - approached this level of decrease. The other districts increased in population, with the largest growth in Lisburn from 84,007 to 98,826 (17.6%), reflecting the development of Poleglass as well as other movement into the area. Ards, Banbridge, Carrickfergus and Magherafelt all showed growth in excess of 10%.

SEXES

At the 1991 Census there were 764,818 males and 805,153 females enumerated. This represents a female/male ratio of 1,053 females per 1,000 males in the enumerated population for Northern Ireland as a whole compared with the ratio of 1,041 at the 1981 Census and 1,035 at the 1971 Census.

1991 CENSUS PRELIMINARY RESULTS COMPARED WITH ESTIMATES

Table 'E' shows a comparison between the 1991 preliminary results and the latest available estimates as produced by the Northern Ireland General Register Office. These estimates include the effects of a revised estimate made in 1986 by the Department of Finance and Personnel of the element of non-response to the 1981 Census.

Taking into account the households which have not as yet returned Census forms and allowing for population change in the period July 1990–April 1991, the agreement between the Northern Ireland 1990 mid-year estimate and the Census enumeration is good. At district council level there is some deviation, reflecting the difficulty in attributing non-enumeration at the 1981 Census and migration in the period 1981–91 correctly to district councils within Northern Ireland. The estimate was substantially higher than the Census enumeration in Antrim (7.5%) and Newry and Mourne (9.1%), whereas it was substantially lower in Armagh (–4.3%), Carrickfergus (–4.0%), Castlereagh (–4.3%), Coleraine (–4.8%), Cookstown (–10.3%), Fermanagh (–6.8%) and Magherafelt (–7.5%).

TOWNS

In 1971 towns with legally defined boundaries could be identified as such because of their relationship to local government administrative areas. With the introduction of the existing local government districts on 1 October 1973 under the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, towns with legally defined boundaries disappeared. However, it is proposed that information for towns will be available in the published Summary Report. This will be achieved by the combination of grid squares covering the built-up area of each town as derived from Ordnance Survey Maps.

PRIVATE HOUSEHOLDS

The 1991 figure for enumerated households is 524,638. Table 2 shows the overall Northern Ireland position by each local government district for both the enumerated and estimated total number of households in 1981 and for enumerated households in 1991. Measured against the 1981 estimated figure the number of households in 1991 reflects an increase of 63,388 over the period. Table 3 gives information on enumerated households and population in 1991, to ward level. The main changes occur in Ards, Derry, Lisburn, Newry and Mourne and North Down which show increases of 3,928, 5,370, 7,307, 3,615 and 3,754 respectively. All other districts also show an increase in the number of households enumerated, with the exception of Belfast which shows a decrease of 495. These figures are subject to upward revision as late returns are received.

TABLES 1-3

These Tables provide details of the Northern Ireland population from 1821 to 1991 (Table 1). They also provide details of private households for 1981 and 1991 by local government districts (Table 2).

A review of local government boundaries in 1984 resulted in a substantial revision of ward boundaries. Therefore, for the purposes of Table 3 (population and private households by wards) comparison with 1981 has been omitted.
